Where a building has been legally erected prior to the date of the passing of this By-law on a lot having less than the minimum frontage and/or area, or having less than the minimum front yard, side yard, rear yard or usable open space required by this By-law, the said building may be enlarged, reconstructed, repaired or renovated provided said enlargement, reconstruction, repair or renovation does not serve to further reduce a required yard or required usable open space and provided all other provisions of this By-law are complied with including the 30 metre (98.4 ft.) setback from the highwater mark of any waterbody or watercourse.

SHORELINE SETBACKS (EXCERPT FROM "RIDEAU LAKES STUDY")

5.3 SHORELINE SETBACKS

5.3.1 Overview

The Sewage System Regulations under the Environmental Protection Act require that sewage systems be set back 15 m from shorelines. This requirement is designed to protect surface water quality from effluent originating in tile fields and leaching beds on the basis of public health concerns. In recent years, the Ontario Ministries of the Environment and Natural Resources have been requesting setbacks for sewage systems and buildings on lake trout lakes which exceed those currently required for sewage systems only. As well, as noted in Section 5.1, some study area municipalities also require building and sewage system setbacks in excess of provincial requirements. The recent concerns advanced by the approval agencies relate to potential changes in lake trophic state due to phosphorus migration from tile fields and related shoreline development to surface waters, and the resulting effects on lake aesthetics and fish and wildlife habitat. Approval agencies are now viewing more extended setbacks as effective mechanisms to reduce impacts resulting from shoreline development.

The underlying principle of an extended setback is that, the greater the distance the tile field and development are from the lake, the greater the capacity of the intervening land base to intercept and retain phosphorus. Some of the factors contributing to phosphorus retention by soils are soil chemistry and absorption capacity, phosphorus concentration in and loading rate of septic tank effluent, composition and density of the vegetation cover, and slope conditions. It is logical to expect variations in the degree of effectiveness of different landscapes to mitigate potential trophic state impacts. For example, deep, sandy loam soils supporting continuous forest growth on level sites would naturally retain more phosphorus than shallow, discontinuous mantles over steeply sloping bedrock. It follows, therefore, that a development located on sites of the former type would not need as great a setback as one located on sites of the latter type.

The degree of setback required remains a matter of conjecture, and the research on the subject is inconclusive. Depending on their viewpoint and objectives, resource manager may phrase the question in one of two ways:

- how far back from a lakeshore must development be situated in order to significantly reduce phosphorus loads from tile fields and surface uses?
- or, how far back must development be situated before it can be assumed that no phosphorus above natural background levels will enter the lake?

Dillon and Rigler (1975) indicated that in Ontario's lake country, development beyond 305 m (1,000 ft.) of the shoreline of a lake or its inflowing streams or rivers should not have any phosphorus impact on the lake. However, this value was essentially picked out of the air.

In 1974, a joint Ministry of the Environment-Ministry of Natural Resources committee in Southeastern Ontario recommended a number of precautionary measures for new development on all recreational waters. The recommended measures were as follows (Aitkens 1975, p.3).

Slope	Slope Angle	Width of Area of Concern
0% - 15%	0 - 8°	30 m
16% - 30%	9° - 17°	50 m
31% - 45%	18° - 24°	70 m
46% - 60%	25° - 31°	90 m

Although the above setbacks focus on timber operations rather than residential or cottage development, one of the key reasons for applying them relates to reducing "the input of phosphorus to water courses by reducing surface runoff and by trapping phosphorus-bearing sediment and logging debris" (Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources 1988b, pg. 1). In this sense, these setbacks might also be applied more generally to address trophic state concerns related to shoreline development.

However, we are of the opinion that factors other than slope are more important in setting out possible setback guidelines for shoreline development. In the following paragraphs, we describe those biophysical features which we consider to be important (soil depth, soil texture, slope, and vegetation cover), and a proposed scoring system which is subsequently related to recommended shoreline setbacks. We acknowledge that the suggested approach has not been developed on the basis of reams of data collected in a rigorous and scientific fashion; rather, it represents the results of the experience in applying and implementing development setbacks in a wide range of biophysical landscapes across Ontario for a variety of environmental protection and resource management purposes. Also, we emphasize that the discussion which follows relates to existing or predevelopment terrain conditions. An obvious consideration is how far back from the shoreline an analysis must be undertaken for any given lot or landscape. In certain situations, it will be immediately clear that a site has good development capability, and an evaluation of limited extent will be required. However, more complex sites will require more extensive analysis. In effect, the scope of any evaluation is clearly site dependent.

5.3.2 Soil Depth

The Ontario Sewage Systems Regulations require that the bottoms of distribution line trenches be at least 90 cm above impermeable surfaces, such as bedrock or compact clay. Given that the trenches themselves need to be from 60 to 90 cm deep, it follows that the deeper the soil, the more suitable it is for tile field installation. However, soil depth has other implications, the most critical being nutrient, and in particular phosphorus, retention. In this regard, Robertson, Cherry, and Sudicky (1991) reported that phosphorus concentrations in groundwater (expressed as phosphate phosphorus) rapidly decreased with depth directly under weeping tiles; for example, they noted concentrations of 10 mg/L approximately 50 cm below the tiles, 1 mg/L about 100 cm below, and 0.1 mg/L about 150 cm below.

Based on the above considerations, the following scores are suggested for soil depth at the site of a proposed tile field.

concentrations reaching the groundwater and/or nearby water bodies were very low, even where sandy soils predominated.

Robertson, Cherry and Sudicky (1991) undertook detailed groundwater monitoring of two single family residences to determine the impact of septic systems on shallow unconfined aquifers in southern Ontario. One site at Cambridge, located on a carbonate-rich sand aquifer, was in operation for over 12 years, while the other site on the Muskoka River near Bracebridge, on a poorly buffered, carbonate-depleted sand aquifer, was in operation for one year. While high levels (about 10 mg/L) of phosphorus were found in the septic tank effluent, concentrations were substantially attenuated immediately below the tile bed. For example, at the Cambridge site, "... phosphate phosphorus > 1 mg/L [was] mostly confined to the aquifer area immediately below the tile bed, while at Muskoka, no detectable phosphate phosphorus (> 0.02 mg/L) was observed in the groundwater zone." (Robertson, Cherry and Sudicky 1991, p. 9). While the precise mechanism of attenuation was not confirmed at either site, the geochemistry of the groundwater suggests a hydroxylapatite phosphate phosphorus complexing process at the Cambridge site, while at the Bracebridge site, attenuation was likely controlled by the presence of sparsely soluble phosphate minerals such as stregnite (an iron complex) or varisite (an aluminum-based compound), or by absorption.

There is no question that identifying, understanding, and confirming the mechanisms which determine the limits to phosphorus attenuation in different shoreline landscapes is important. For example, if the control is soil surface absorption, then phosphorus mobility will increase when the number of absorption sites are filled. However, if the controlling process continues indefinitely, as in the case of chemical combination with other effluent and soil constituents to form minerals, then phosphorus transport will not be a concern as long as the septic system continues to operate properly. In our opinion, it is probably not one mechanism or the other which operates in any one situation; rather, both mechanisms are likely in effect at most lakeshore sites. Regardless, some guidelines on the phosphorus retention capacity of soils are available; in this regard, the following are reproduced from Aitkens (1977, p. 9):

- "1. Good phosphorus retention capability - generally greater than 7 mg/100 g of soil. Generally uniform results.
2. Acceptable phosphorus retention - generally greater than 6 mg/100 g of soil.
3. Marginally acceptable phosphorus retention - generally greater than 5 mg/100 g of soil.
4. Not acceptable - generally less than 5 mg/100 g of soil."

From the foregoing, it is difficult to designate a score based on soil texture, simply because coarse and fine textured soils influence percolation and phosphorus retention capacity in different ways. In this regard, tile fields installed on clay soils often need to be partially or fully raised due to the clay's low permeability. The site modifications necessary for this type of site would suggest implementing a more stringent setback than on a site where no soil-based modifications would be required. However, clay has a planted with small grains or legumes or from rotation meadows. Runoff is greatest from straight row treatments, but somewhat less from contoured fields, and less still from contoured and terraced fields. As might be expected, fallow fields produce the greatest amounts of runoff (Wischmeier and Smith 1978 and Dickinson n.d.).

Expressing slope as a percentage permits easy comparison of the relationship of the vertical (rise) to the horizontal (run). For example, a 30% slope will rise 30 m vertically over a horizontal distance of 100 m.

Given the above, an appropriate approach to addressing vegetation cover would be to assign scores to broad cover types, determine the percentage of the area under question covered by each type, and calculate a weighted score in the same manner as was done for slopes. Suggested cover types and their respective scores are as follows.

Vegetation Cover Type

	Scope
Undisturbed woodlands, old fields and meadows	0
Disturbed woodlands, old fields and meadows	3
Close-seeded legumes (clover, alfalfa) and rotation meadows	5
Row crops	7
Fallow fields and base bedrock outcrops	10

An example of how this approach might be applied to a 20 ha site with varying vegetation cover characteristics is as follows:

Cover Type	Area Covered		Class Score	Weighted Score
	ha	%
Undisturbed woodland	4	20%	0	0
Rotation meadow	6	30%	3	0.9
Row crops	10	50%	7	3.5
Total	20	100%		4.4 = 4.

In addition, we would suggest that 5 points be deducted from the vegetation cover score for shorelines fronted by wetlands which extend a minimum of 10 m offshore and consist of dense emergent aquatics and/or lowland thickets or forests, and which are to be retained intact. In this regard, the effect of phosphorus loading on a receiving lake or river is strongly dependent upon the timing and rate of addition. If phosphorus is added at a time when other factors are limiting algal growth, or when phosphorus is already abundant, little additional growth will occur. Factors which control the entry rates and timing of phosphorus loadings to lakes can effectively function to suppress unwanted growth. Accordingly, nearshore wetlands and the vegetation of the land-water interface are important in regulating the timing and rate of phosphorus loading; significant in this regard is the zone of emergent plants including species such as cattails and bulrushes, and the complex community of microflora (algae and bacteria) that grow on the surfaces of the plants and sediments. When phosphorus is added to this zone, it is not immediately utilized and incorporated into plant tissue; rather it tends to be first assimilated by

2. Moderately rolling lands underlain by Precambrian bedrock, with shallow but continuous soil and forest cover (for example, the north shore of Big Rideau Lake near Murphy's Point Provincial Park).

- soil depth 25 - 50 cm	8
- coarse-textured sand	10
- slope 10% - 25%	5
- vegetation cover	0
- setback = 60 m	23

3. Level to moderately sloping lands underlain by limestone bedrock, with shallow but continuous soil and plant cover, varying from forest to uniformly dense old field communities (for example, the south shore of Big Rideau Lake near Jacklins Bay).

- soil depth 25 - 50 cm	8
- silty sands	3
- slope 0 - 9%	0
- vegetation cover	0
- setback = 40 m	11

4. Level to moderately sloping lands underlain by limestone bedrock, with deep soils and plant cover consisting predominantly of old fields, meadows, and cultivated fields (for example, the south shore of Westport, Sand Lake and the south shore of Upper Rideau Lake east of Westport).

- soil depth > 150 cm	0
- sandy loam	3
- slope 0 - 9%	0
- vegetation cover	3
- setback = 30 m	6

Coupled with these setbacks would be requirements to ensure sufficient phosphorus retention within tile fields. To this end, tile field fill should be installed with and regularly maintained to a phosphorus retention capability of at least 6 mg/100 g of soil (Aitkens1977).

Also, consideration should be given to approving a given setback, on condition that the applicant undertake to modify or abandon cultivation and revegetate the property to the extent required to qualify for that setback through a reduced vegetation cover score.

In conclusion, we believe that if shoreland properties are developed in accordance with the above setback and fill guidelines, the phosphorus impacts of development on lake trophic state will be statistically insignificant.
